Barred White Lie For Only One Day; Friends Deserted

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 .- After thinking | clothes at my tailor's. All the candy it over for a long time, this man de-cided that he would adjure all social "I white lies and to give utterances to nothing but the truth.

He expected to have some difficulty in doing this. He well knew that the truth often had a harsh ring. But he made up his mind that he was going to lead his own life, and in the pursuit of that purpose, he would let nothing but the naked truth escape his lips.

And so he put his purpose to stick to the undraped truth into operation one recent morning. As he passed out of the flat vestibule on his way to the subway a man of his acquaintance in the apartment building greeted him pleasantly.
"Sumptuous morning, eh?" said the neighbor cheerily.

"I do not consider it a sumptuous morning," replied the truthteller. "I consider it too not."

A Setback.

The flat neighbor looked somewhat chagrined over this brusque reply, but he made a new start.

Somehow or another I always feel better in hot weather than I do when weight during the dog days. I guess, about most politely.

"Yes," promptly replied the man, determined to teil the truth. "I do not think your recovery has been very rapid, I have seen typnoid patients pick up muca more rapidly."

"Say, d'ye mean to say that I'm not looking bully for a fellow that's been through the siege I have?" inquired the truth register. The same that register is the register of annoyance in you.

s tone. "In my opinion, you look very poorly," piled the truthteller, with a stern dermination not to be swerved. "Hun! Got kind of a grouch on this orning, hey" said the flat neighbor, as a passed on down the steps. On the subway train the truthteller uight a seat alongside another man of ter from my dearest child, and she is getting on so famously with her singing. She's under De Reszke, in Parls, you know. She'll be back in two years now, and what's furore she is bound to create on the concert stage, don't you think?"

"Well, I'd hardly venture to the stage of the first terms of that," said the truthteller, with dogsed resolution.

"Wha-wha-wha," fairly gasped the astonished mother of the dearest child.
"Do you mean to say that—"
"I grieve to be compelled to tell you that I really never found much delight in listening to the singing of the young lady, thoroughly appreciative as I am of her many amiable and engaging qualties," declared the truthteller.
"Why, you surely have been drinking!" acridly snapped the elderly woman, and she gave her parasol a flourish and went her way in obvious dudgeon.

"I don't like it," promptly replied the man with the new determination.
"How's that?" inquired the old friend, visibly chapfallen. "Well, that's sure brief and right to the point. Don't like it, hey—just like that. Well, out with it then! What the dickens is the matter with the mess o' togs, according to your view?"

your view?"
"I think the material of the suit is too loud and young for a man of your age," said the truthteller, sticking to his guns.

"Well, dang my eyes!" broke out the old friend, his face crimsoning. "If that isn't a wallop! Say, d'ye mean to tell me that I'.n going around trying to look young and gaydoggish and cutuppish, hev?"

'That," replied the truthteller, "is the nly impression one could derive from a examination of the suit of clothes ou are wearing." The old friend stared at the truth-

"Huh—what's that:" flared up the ruthteller's acquaintance. "Say, you of out of your bunk on the wrong side his morning," and the acquaintance, orely afronted, moved over to the oposite crosswise seat.

As he left the subway to make his office the truthteller met an elderly roman whose daughter is in Europe tudying singing.
